NEWARK, DE: The Delaware Historical Society (DHS) is pleased to announce that Newark Charter School Teacher Dr. Lisa Prueter is one of only ten master teachers nationwide to be selected to write a new Teaching with Primary Sources guide that will be available to teachers around the world. This guide will be the newest addition to the wealth of materials provided by the Library of Congress Teaching with Primary Sources (TPS) Consortium for educators in the United States and around the globe.

"Delaware is fortunate to have a number of teachers who excel in teaching with primary sources utilizing the National History Day model, making history come to life for our students while teaching valuable 21st century career and college ready skills," said Rebecca Fay, Director of Education with DHS. “We are extremely proud of Dr. Prueter and are pleased that teachers around the world will benefit from her experience and expertise.”

Over the next several months, the teachers will work directly with NHD and Library of Congress staff to create and test this new guide which will present the processes for successful student research and the formation of strong, cogent historical arguments. In its lesson plans for practical application, the guidebook will feature primary sources from the vast collections of the Library of Congress, the largest library in the world. Dr. Prueter’s experience will include travel to the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C., for advanced training and on-site writing and development workshops.

Suitable for use by teachers at the middle and high school levels, the new guide will support the creation of a variety of student research projects, including documentaries, exhibits, papers, performances, and websites.
NHD will distribute both print and online versions of the guide and will present a four-module teacher webinar series to feature best practices for the guide’s implementation.

“Dr. Prueter and her fellow cohort members bring years of incomparable classroom and project-based teaching experience,” said National History Day Executive Director Dr. Cathy Gorn. “I know they will elevate this opportunity to showcase the Library’s primary source collections and provide their peers around the world with a coveted new teaching tool. We are grateful for this opportunity to work with the Library of Congress as creation partners for this valuable project.”

Dr. Prueter, who currently teaches World History and AP European History at the Newark Charter School, has been teaching for 21 years. She previously taught at Wilmington Friends School and has supervised student teachers at the University of Delaware and was the social studies specialist for the Appoquinimink School District.

She started NHD in 1999 - her first year of teaching - with ninth graders. One of her students won the state competition for her exhibit. “NHD is hard work for both students and teachers, but I think it is the best way to get students ready for the demands of college,” said Dr. Prueter. “I enjoy learning something new every year from their research.”

Dr. Lisa Ueltzhoffer, principal at Newark Charter School Junior and Senior High School, said Lisa and fellow NCS teacher Brent Freccia have embedded NHD into the school’s curriculum and organize an annual NHD Fair to highlight student work. “Lisa Prueter’s and Brent Freccia’s collaboration and leadership are greatly appreciated to implement the National History Day project as a part of our curriculum,” she said. “We are excited to see history come alive for our 6th annual NHD family event where all 10th and 11th grade students showcase their work.”

Applications for this program were submitted by 65 educators from across the United States, and the final cohort of ten teachers was selected by a committee of National History Day and Library of Congress staff members. The educators chosen for the program represent Alabama, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Minnesota, Pennsylvania, Washington, and Washington, D.C.

Delaware History Day, which has been organized by DHS for more than 20 years, will be held on April 4, 2020 at Gunning Bedford Middle School. Winners of the state competition will move on to nationals held in June.
